Overcoming borders

“Since the imposition of the state of emergency on 1 February 2021, Myanmar is once again in a state of upheaval, and it remains to be seen how the political situation of the country will develop in the near future. We are here for you, even in these difficult times, to answer your questions about your ongoing or planned local projects.”

Our presence in Myanmar

Situated between India and China, Myanmar (formerly known as Burma) acts as a gateway between the world's two most populated countries. The country boasts vast areas of agricultural land, huge hydro-power reserves and an abundance of raw materials such as crude oil, gas, copper, wolfram, jade, gemstones and wood. Alongside its natural resources, Myanmar offers overland transport routes leading to Thailand, China and India, which will be considerably expanded in the coming years. Additionally, the country's attractive coastline along the Andaman Sea and the Bay of Bengal does not only offer short ocean freight shipping routes, but also holds enormous potential for tourism development.

Myanmar is a member state of the WTO and the Association of Southeast Asian Nations ASEAN. Although Myanmar has been continuously opening up to the world since the end of 2010 – with a gradual transition from military rule to a parliamentary democracy and an opening market – recent developments unfortunately point into a different direction. Following the imposition of a state of emergency on 1 February 2021, it now remains to be seen how Myanmar's political situation will evolve in the near future. There is no question that both, the political upheavals and the effects of the Corona pandemic will also have a noticeable impact on the economic situation of the former Burma, at least in the medium term.

Only 50 years ago, Myanmar used to be South-East Asia's strongest economy. With its strategic location, a population of approximately 54 million people and comparably low salary levels, Myanmar has strong prerequisites at hand to play an important role in Asia's economic landscape again.

Rödl & Partner established a wholly-owned office in Yangon, Myanmar's former capital and its most important commercial center. With a team of advisers fluent in German, English, Mandarin and Burmese, we render legal and tax advisory services as well as accounting assistance from a single source. Our Yangon office predominantly focuses on structuring and incorporating companies, investment projects, and business transactions. Additionally, we offer a full array of outsourcing services in the areas of accounting and payroll services.

A vital component of doing business in Myanmar is an efficient contact management with the local authorities responsible for the issuance of business licenses. Rödl & Partner has an excellent network of contacts through its experienced Myanmar lawyers and tax experts.

Of course, we continue to be here for you in these difficult times. If you have any questions regarding current or planned projects on site or if you need professional support, please do not hesitate to contact us at any time.
